

THE SOUTHERN OF IRELAND

Looking over my little treasure, Thoughts of many a bygone day
Filling in my mind's eye
Through the daylight's fading gray.
Range themselves in solemn order,
Brought by the dusky gloom,
Filling with their mystic presence
All my silent, lonely room.

Here a letter, old and yellow,
Spoken in the days of yore,
And the hand that traced it gently, Moulders in a far-off clime.
Still another—round it lingers Fragrance of the violet;
And the writer, false hearted,
Loved the motto "never forget!"

Let a man but stand upright,
And he is sure to have the whole earth at his feet.

Sown saddle horses are undoubtedly things to be praised, but buggy horses we should hesitate about.

Why is a person annoyed by a fool like one who falls into the sea? Because he is a man overboard.

In what respect do gold miners differ from all other people?
They never say die, though all their earthly ambitions are ore.

We wonder whether General Grant had a joke in his mind when he spoke of the army being corked up in a bottle by a Butler.

Disimulation in youth is the forerunner of perjury in old age;
its appearance is the fatal omen of growing depravity and future shame.

MEN of short memories and misers are alike; the former are always forgetting, and the latter always for getting.
